To Physical Plant:

The campus needs an unambiguously central place for the dissemination of campus information; one that is accessible no matter what paths you commonly take to navigate the campus. Use the utterly wasted base of the flag pole in Red Square to erect the first-and-only truly universally public bulletin board. Simply take four 6' x 3' corkboards, and mount them in a square around the pole (perhaps with a lighted overhang for weather protection). To save money, feel free to steal parts from the weird bulletin board on the corner of Jonas Clark.

Or, you can do what I have done with all my roommates. We are each given a trash basket for our desks, so we use one of them for trash and the other for paper. Every dorm has a big paper recycling bin, and a place for glass & plastic & cans. Easy solution. I mean, we're already sharing a room, so what's the big deal to share a trashcan?

You're in the lame-duck transitional period between Council leadership. Fortunately for you, 3 out of the 4 incomers are already Council members. This gives you an opportunity to address one of the biggest sources of problems on this campus: the utter lack of a sense of history in Clark's civil servants.

The transitional period is four weeks, including Spring Break. Use the time to put in place mechanisms for keeping your organizational history alive.

To Student Council:

One idea: put together a series of informal social gatherings for the purpose of passing on the stories that constitute the essence of Council history—the failed experiments, the successful experiments, the tragedies, the resignations, the impeachments, the theories behind the rulings, the gradual evolution of Council into what it is today.

Include the people on this campus who have been around long enough—and who have been paying enough attention—to have such stories. Here are some people to consider for the invite list to a hypothetical gathering, in addition to the out-goers: Michael Gibson, Yazad Dalal, Linda Brown Connors, Randy Mack, Emily Sachs, Barry Cohen, Forest Lee, Rob Mohns; and alumni: Marty Mohr, Dave Cantor, Wiley Cox, and Mike Fourcher are all available via email.

The gatherings would be a fantastic supplement to regular training.

Subj: Forispaa's suggestion

Fred Forispaa asks a really sensible question:

-> "How about Clark investing two dollars extra to buy some more trash cans, for different kinds of trash. I can't imagine those plastic trash cans to cost too much."

They don't. We bought separate "blue" bins for all the offices in Philosophy house, to encourage paper recycling, and they were approx. $5 each.

And now that the city of Worcester accepts ALL plastics and ALL paper and cardboard for recycling, the "sort by number" issue is gone. So, why don't dorm rooms and common areas all have multiple wastebaskets??

Hmmm! A project for a few activists, maybe??
